THE COMET. - Professor O. M. Mitchel has made an observation of the new come at the Dudley Observatory, and offers the following explanation of its sudden appearance:-" If it be permitted to hazard a conjecture, we may account for the sudden splendor of this grand object by supposing that during its approach to the sun at has been above the horizon only during day-light, and hence escaped detection; that on passing its perihelion, or nearest point from the sun, the direction of the orbit was such as to sweep it rapidly from that luminary and to bring it in a very few days to the region of the heavens now 'occupied. This conjecture is based on the general fact that comets do not commonly throw off such immense trains of light until after their perhelion passage. Until a sufficient number of observations have been obtained to render it possible to compute the elements of its orbit, it will be impossible to decide whether this is its first appearance or whether it be the return of a comet that may have startled the world ages ago." It is claimed that this is the comet which was observed in this city, on the 4th of April last, by Mr. Albert E. Thatcher.
